Dear Harry:

Have I neglected 'til now to answer your letter of February 12th?
My apologies.

Our plans for traveling this spring are somewhat less decisive than they were before but we will certainly be seeing you at the Naples meeting. I think your attitude about asking Cavalli about speaking at Milan is both diffident and inverted. Your visiting there would be no imposition but I should think a welcome stimulus. Why don't you just write to Cavalli directly and I'm sure he will make every effort to induce you to stop by.

No, I had nothing whatever to do with the organization of this Symposium and was somewhat surprised to find myself a member of it. However, I look forward to learning a great deal there.

We are, of course, quite pleased to have settled our arrangements with Len Herzenberg and are looking forward to his coming out here this fall.

Yours sincerely,

Joshua Lederberg
